Populism's defeat in France

The consequences for the European Union

Monday August 28 | 12 noon

Foley Speaker's Room | 308 Bryan Hall

What does the election of Emmanuel Macron and the defeat of Marine LePen mean for France and the future of populism in Europe? What are the likely effects on the European Union?

Sylvain Brouard is a research fellow at the National Foundation of Political Sciences in Paris, France. His research examines the context of the relationship between political competition, institutions and public action.
